CORPORATE RESPONSIBILITY

1. Background and definitions

Flex Force Enterprises Inc. aims to operate all business activities in ways that support sound and sustainable economic and social development, as well as minimizing the burden on the environment. In order to achieve this goal Flex Force has a number of conditions that must be satisfied by vendors. These include requirements regarding the suppliers' level of social responsibility, environmental responsibility, economic responsibility as well as their corporate governance.

Social responsibility relates to the protection of human rights, quality of life and positive social structures, and the prevention of social dumping and social exclusion. A supplier that is socially responsible is conscious of how it affects people and society socially, culturally and socio-economically. Social responsibility comprises both the supplier's intra-firm responsibility as well as wider, external social responsibility. The requirements for social responsibility can be found in article 2 below.

Environmental responsibility refers to how a company can minimize negative environmental impact and contribute to an environmentally sound production, trade and consumption. The environmental requirements are found in article 3 below and may also be a part of any pre-qualification process.

Economic responsibility refers to how suppliers choose to invest their profits; the extent to which their investments in both products and services are done lawfully and ethically. The economic requirements are mainly a part of the pre-qualification process where suppliers must submit tax certificates, auditor-approved financial statements etc.

Corporate governance comprises the processes through which a company is managed and controlled. In other words, how a supplier is structured, and how it executes authority, accountability, management, leadership, performance management and control. Corporate governance is the foundation for exercising corporate responsibility in the three above-mentioned categories through set systems, guidelines and control for ethical conduct. The requirements for corporate governance can be found in article 4 below.

2. Social responsibility

a. Introduction

Flex Force shall respect the fundamental requirements of human rights, labor rights, and the environment. All products shall be designed and manufactured under conditions that are compatible with the requirements listed below. The requirements are based on the central UN-conventions, ILO-conventions and national labor law at the place of production.

These requirements establish minimum standards. Where the conventions and national laws and regulations relates to the same subject, the highest standard shall always prevail. If the subcontractors are used in the course of business, Flex Force shall forward the requirements so that the supplier can contribute to the compliance with these requirements.
